About Our Presenter George Couros

Laying the Foundation for Innovation in Education

The best way to deal with change is to initiate the change we want to see in our schools and classrooms. As we ask our staff to create innovative learning opportunities for ALL students, what are the core elements that we need to create and sustain to support teachers in their approach, and why does it matter? We cannot lead and create the innovative schools of today and tomorrow by focusing and recreating the leadership of yesterday. How do we ensure that we support our educators, communities, and students while we are all feeling overwhelmed? How do we embrace the “Innovator’s Mindset” when innovation is no longer optional, but necessary for all learners, including ourselves? The “core of innovative teaching and learning” focuses on four areas where we need to deepen and push our thinking to create an environment within education to develop our students as the leaders of not only tomorrow but give our students opportunities to make an impact on the world today. Every learner in our schools needs to be successful in a way that matters to them. We need to redefine our core elements to help those we serve to find their own pathways to their success.
